

Disney Intern

My girlfriend is in Florida working for Disney
They have her doing laundry in a musty basement with bitter middle-aged widows.
It's apparently awful. "Ruins the magic".

Cinderella, in a wig cap half naked
Snow white, asking for kombucha
She says these princesses would sooner fuck
a man covered in nacho grease than show her any respect.

I say, "remember Hairspray?"
That moment when the director yells "CUT! "
and the actors go back to the miserable lives we're all familiar with.
our long term goal, is making a living wage

We are escapists at heart.
long distance lovers clinging to our dreams
I dream about her while I wash these trash cans.

Her faith in magic,
the day she comes home from Disney,
and bends me over some pizza boxes.

Nicholas M. Coulombe is a local Maine Writer who shares tear-jerking, relatable and honest poetry of loss, passion and witness. He has featured his poetry all over New England and has been published in the anthology "The Poets of Maine" by Underground Writers Association, is scheduled to be published in the 5th volume of "I can count to 10" by Broken Head Press and is also scheduled to be published in the 4th volume of "GOOD FAT" created and edited by Mike Nelson, Poet Laureate of Portsmouth. If you like Nicholas's work or are interested in more information you can visit his website, Nicholascoulombe.info

I Can Count To 10 v ol.5 # Summer 2018 # I Can Count To 10 vol.5

brokenheadpress.com

Thank You For Participating!